In a small village, a house was robbed. Two days later, the thief was caught by the local police. A new policeman was ordered to take the thief to the city. They should go there by train. So the policeman took the thief to the railway station. They passed by a shop, and saw that all kinds of bread was sold in it. The thief said to the policeman, "It is a long way to the city. We will get hungry if we have nothing to eat on the train. Why don't we buy some bread here? They policeman waited for him for a long time. But the thief didn't come out. He rushed into the shop angrily. But the thief wasn't there. He realized he was cheated.

Later the thief was caught again. Again the same policeman was ordered to take him to the city. He was told to be more careful this time. Then they set off. On their way to the railway station, they passed by the shop again. The thief asked to buy some bread for the trip. He promised not to run away this time. "No!" said the policeman, "Don't want to fool me again! I will never trust you. You just wait here, I will go inside the shop to buy some bread!" And with these words, he rushed into the shop again.
