Mr Smith moved to another town. One day he didn't feel very well, so he went to see the doctor. He sat down in the waiting—room and looked around. The doctor's degrees were on the wall. Suddenly Mr Smith remembered there had been a classmate with the same name in his class at school, and he had become a doctor!

As he went in to see the doctor, he remembered a young, handsome student and was sad to how old this man looked. He said to him, "Good morning, Doctor. Did you go to King High School?" The doctor answered, "Yes, I did."

"Were you there from 1942 to 1946?" Mr Smith asked.

"Yes, I was," the doctor answered. "How did you know?" Mr Smith laughed and said, "you were in my class!"

"Oh?" the doctor said and looked at him carefully for a few minutes. "What were you teaching?"

In a big city, everyone is in a hurry in the early morning. In the morning, people are hurrying out of the stations, buses and cars. Some people are stopping only to drink a quick cup of coffee. There is no time for breakfast. By eight thirty, one after another the shops along the streets open for business. People work busily all day.

At six o'clock in the evening, people hurry home after work. Most of the offices are closed, but some shops are still open.

Many people work at night in a big city. Tonight, bright lights are shining from the windows of the tallest buildings. In newspaper offices, reporters are working hard. In hospitals night nurses are making their usual rounds.

All through the evening, taxis and buses take people around the city. Some people are going to the plays. Some are going to the cinema. You can hear the sounds of talking, laughing and singing. You can hear music, too. Tonight, there are many people on the sidewalks. Some are stopping to look in the bright shop windows. The others are waiting for buses and taxis.
